Customization
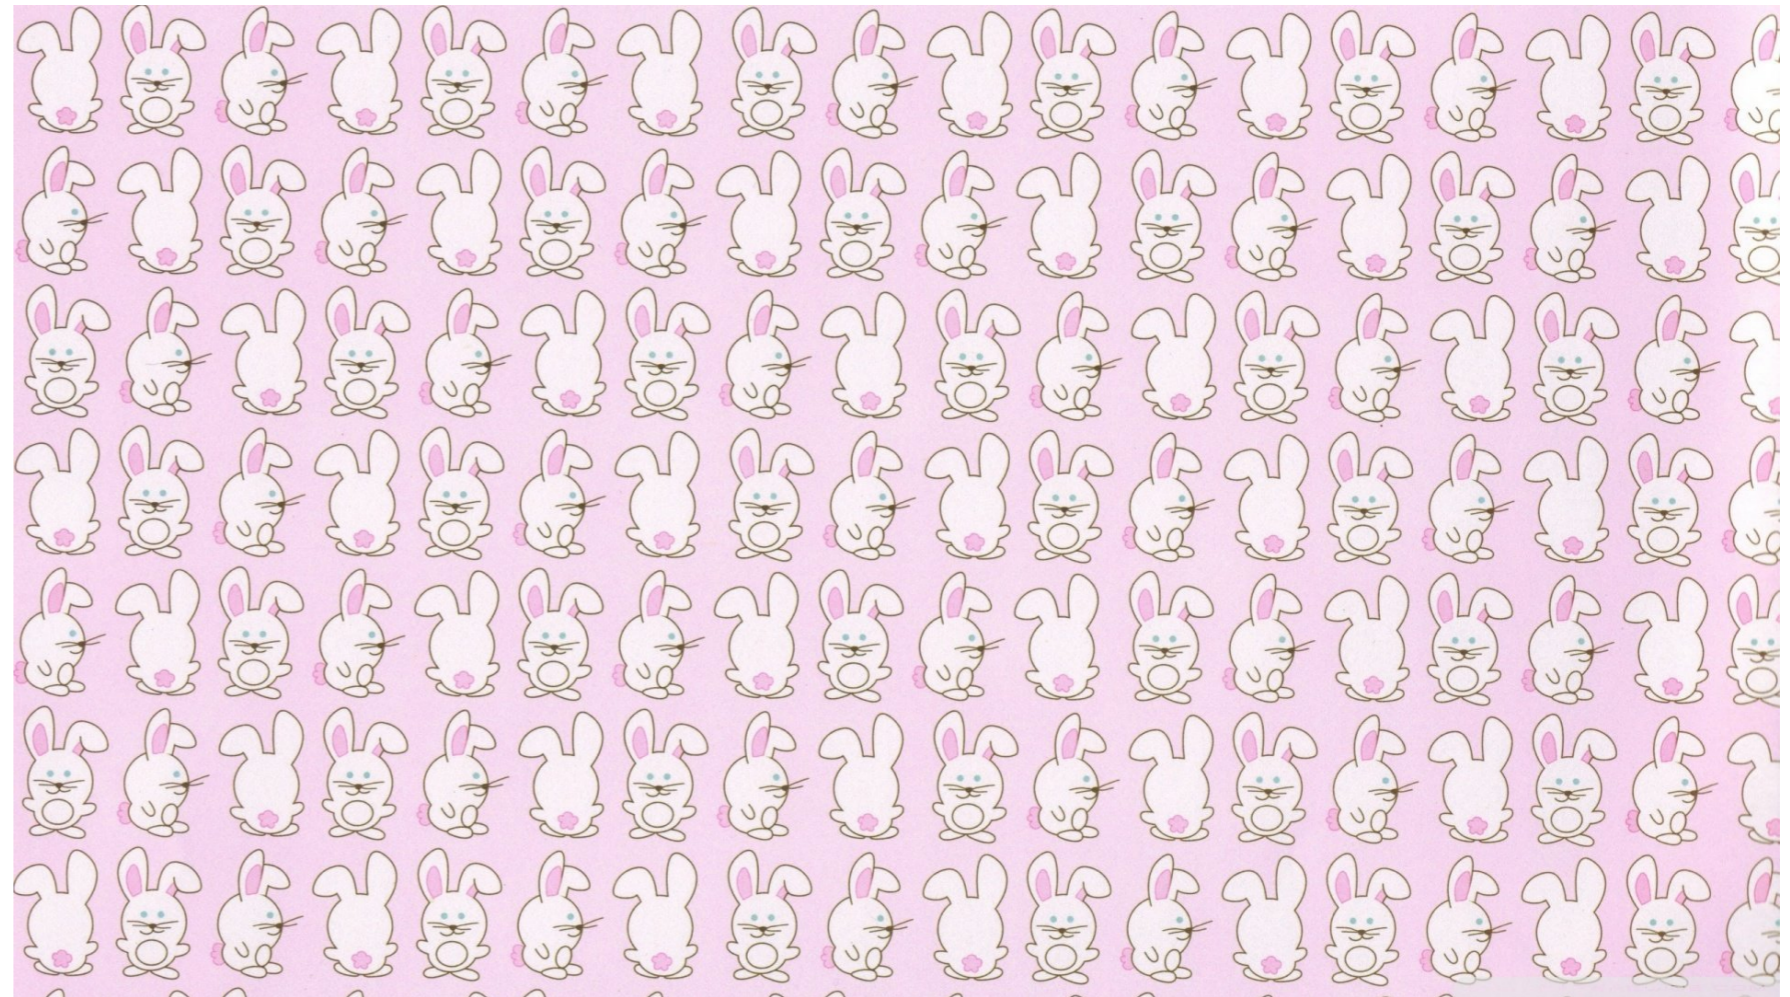

When I was in middle school, AIM was the big social networking platorm used to talk to my friends. One of the big things with AIM was that you could customize your bio page with different colors, fonts, pictures, and GIFS. Even though it is something that would be kind of overlooked today as cheesey and outdated, it was really populat back then. I want to create a page that is fully interactive with the user and can allow the user to create their own customizations.

Gaming

I played a lot of online games back in elementary and middle school and I loved playing these different characters. Sandwich Stack, Teen Titans, and I used to imagine that I was these characters and so I want to create a website that immerses the user in this kind of experience that puts them inside the narrative.

Roiworld/Dressup

My friends and I used to send each other screenshots of the outfits we could make. I want to create something reminiscent of this.
